DIPLOMATIC NETWORKS AND STATE-BUILDING

in Southeast Europe 18th – 20th Century

27 - 28 November 2026
Sofia, Bulgaria

9:00 AM - 6:00 PM

Sofia University,
New Conference Hall
15 Tsar Osvoboditel
Blvd., 1504 Sofia

Conference Overview

The phenomenon of state building has profoundly shaped the modern Balkans, but its diplomatic and international dimensions remain relatively understudied in the field of the humanities.

What were the Medieval and Early Modern origins of diplomatic state-building in Southeast Europe?

What role did the Ottoman Empire and other regional, continental and global factors play in the diplomatic modernization of the region?

Who were the agents of modernization, and how were they integrated (or not) in wider networks of trade, diplomacy, and statecraft?

The current conference seeks to explore these questions through novel historical, interdisciplinary, and digital-humanities perspectives, reappraising the place of Southeast Europe in the global trajectory of statebuilding and situating the region within broader conversations about modernity and modernization.

The conference provides a platform to approach these questions in local, national, regional, continental, and global settings, enabling and encouraging scholars to adopt micro- and macro-perspectives on the diplomatic aspects of state-building processes in Southeast Europe.

17:15–18:00 CONCLUDING ROUND TABLE

Diplomatic Networks and State-Building in Southeast Europe: New Directions

Participants: Conference chairs, project team, panel chairs, and interested speakers

Suggested discussion themes:

– Are consulates best understood as state institutions, transnational intermediaries, or autonomous sites of political action?

– How did overlapping jurisdictions shape modern state formation?

– How did Ottoman institutions and imperial transformations condition diplomatic modernization?

– How can micro-histories of individual consuls and institutions be connected to broader histories of modernization?
